I cannot believe that running a post office for 4 hours a day is going to cost enough to make a big difference. In the big picture, running those little post offices are such a tiny part of the Postal Service's costs I believe that they could close all the little post offices and they won't even see a dent in their budget. Maybe they will save 1% of the overall costs.

These little post offices such as Santa Fe represent the friendly, smiling faces of the postal system. Rural people love them and it would be such a shame to close it down.

Please reconsider closing the Santa Fe Post Office.

Sincerely,

Robert F. Young
